

The Rider News does not remove online archived content. If an inaccuracy is suspected, a formal complaint must be filed (see procedure below). If content is found to be inaccurate, a notice will be posted on the article, editorial, photo or graphic. All decisions are left to the sole discretion of the editorial board.

If the article, editorial, photo or graphic was published less than one year ago, complainant should follow the outlined procedure:

-Contact the executive editor with a telephone number, e-mail address, date and headline of the piece in question, and the suspected inaccuracies.

-If the article, editorial, photo or graphic involves criminal charges and no follow-up story was published, complainant must show proof of expungement in order for an updated notice to be posted to the content in question.

-If the inaccuracies are found to be valid, a notice shall be posted on the content in question.

If the article, editorial, photo or graphic was published more than one year ago, complainant should follow the outlined procedure:

-Contact the executive editor with a telephone number, e-mail address, date and headline of the piece in question, and the suspected inaccuracies.

-Complainant must show proof (ex: expungement papers) in order for a notice to be posted on the article, editorial, photo or graphic in question.

*If an article regarding police activity with students, faculty or administrators runs in The Rider News, there must be a follow-up piece.
